

By now, I am sure you will have realised just how much I have contributed to medicine during my life. Imagine I am giving a speech to some young trainee doctors, as they begin their studies. Write me a speech which will not only tell them how great I am, but will also inspire them to want to follow my ideas and push medicine further forward.

You should try to talk about all the following things:

- The importance of observation
- The complete rejection of supernatural medicine
- The books I have written
- The four humours theory
- A sensible and healthy lifestyle
- Natural treatments for illness
- Diagnosis and prognosis
- The oath to be taken by all doctors

Make what you write sound like you are speaking to someone. You could start your speech like this:

“Good morning gentlemen, and let me tell you how pleased I am to welcome you to the world of medicine. I am Hippocrates of Kos and I want to introduce to you some of the theories and ideas that I believe you should know about straight away. Firstly you should be aware that...”
